Dedication

To you, my little daughters, happy in being The daughters also of an Irish mother, And happiest when no other Than the sweet Irish air Is on your cheeks; to you that blithely share
The gleesome hours, and catch their bliss a-fleeing,
I, with grave pen. inscribe this little book;
Desiring—nay, foreseeing—
That you shall live to look On Ireland's Freeing.

IRELAND UNFREED

THE BOUND ONE

THOU whom not joys but perils and pangs allure:

The white foam's sister, as the white foam pure:

The dark storm's daughter, guarding long and late

That far-descended heirloom, ancient hate:

I cannot say—"In all things that concerned

Thee and thy hopes I never swerved or turned,

Or held with stumbling mind a waver-ing creed."

But this at least I can declare indeed:
Through days with tempest packed, with thunder piled,

My dream was of an Ireland Reconciled

By utter undoing of wrongs all Earth saw done,

And by full freedom to fair friendship won:

Not mocked and cheated, conquering some vain goal

That could but foil the hunger of the soul,

And left as now, with the inmost ills unchanged,

The Spouse whom wedlock hath the more estranged,

Whom bonds do the more direly rend apart;

No—but from long, long sickness of the heart

Delivered: healed with a more sovereign balm

Than the old deep hurts have known:
 and in blest calm—

An Ireland willing to be loved at last—

Risen from the agonies of the loveless Past,

Risen from a hundred shatterings, great and new.

O that 'twere mine to see that dream come true!

MORE THAN TROPHIES

Ev'N were thy freeing complete,
The marks thy fetters made Could not for ever in a moment fade, O Erin, from thy feet!
Why should they? 'Twere more meet That they remained, to be in times afar Held sacred, when perhaps mere glorying Power,
And all its idols of an age or hour, Unreverenced are.

REPRISAL BY FIRE

AND this, is this the justice that we claim

To have kept untarnished in all realms we sway—

This revel of vengeance, blotting the pure day—

These barbarous deeds, that well might make our name

A byword and a hissing and a shame Throughout the Earth? This is the doom-paved way

By which great Empires in august array

March to their thunderous deaths 'mid rage and flame.

These are the acts that in an hour unblest

Cancel a thousand deeds benignly done, Fling far away the good gains Wisdom won,

And striking home to Man's most inward breast

Make Domination seem a maniac jest Heard 'mid the flare of a distempered sun.

TO THE PRIME MINISTER

(THE RT. HON. D. LLOYD GEORGE)

WHEN France was flame, and Belgium ashes, and while

O'er us the flying Death continually Hung near, you rose to greatness.

You were he

Who in the teeth of the enemy's might and guile

Did set a-whirring throughout all this isle

The Wheels of the Machine of Victory.
And when shall we forget it? When the Sea

Forgets his thunder, or the Morn her smile.

But O sad change! Chiefly, to-day, in this

Your mastery towers—that you forbear to stir

A finger, while your minions fierce and fell

Shatter doomed Ireland's homes, and build in her

A suburb of the great metropolis

Of evil and woe, whose name on earth is Hell.

TO SIR HAMAR GREENWOOD

No thin, pale fame, no brief and poor renown,

Were thy just due. Of thee shall wise Time say:

“Chartered for havoc, ’neath his rule, were they

Whose chastisement of guilt was to burn down

The house of innocence, in fear-crazed town

And trembling hamlet. While he had his way,

Converts untold did this man make each day

To savage hate of Law and King and Crown."

Great propagandist of the rebel creed!
Proselytiser without living peer!

If thou stand fast—if thou but persevere—

'Twill be thy glory to complete indeed Valera's work, that doth ev'n now so need

Thy mellow art's last touches, large and clear!

WASTED BLANDISHMENTS

YES, we do justice—here and there;
And patch and peddle and repair;
And even sometimes wonder still Whether our Rule be good or ill;
And marvel much, when Ireland's Soul Defies a Government's control!

We spread before her that vain bait, Co-partnership in our proud fate;
But waywardly and wildly wise,
She turns thereon undazzled eyes.
For she accounts of far more worth Each foot of that green piece of earth

Yonder amid the Atlantic spray, Where 'tis her children's dream to say:
"This is indeed our Isle—our own!
This is our Land—and ours alone."

TO AMERICA CONCERNING IRELAND

FRIEND with frank tongue, who o'er the unflattering sea

Dost likewise flatter not: who view'st the maze

And tangle of things through no vague-shimmering haze:

Pledge thou thy word, that if, long urged by thee,

We loose her bonds and set the Thralled One free,

That Morn-fair deed, crowned with Man's golden praise,

Shall not for us, in thy consenting gaze,

24 TO AMERICA CONCERNING IRELAND

Prove the bright Mother of dark calamity!

Then shall we know that some who else might mar

The Dayspring, and drag Midnight from its grave—

Some whose imperial dreams are loth to die—

Will listen first beside the Western Wave:

Will hear thy thundered interdict afar,
And flee in terror lest they hear it nigh.

COMPLETE DELIVERANCE

“A LEAP in the Dark,” say the champions of Night.

O surely a leap from the Dark, into Light!

A GLORIOUS IMMUNITY

THEE, wounded Ireland, thee I gratu-late;

First, on thy wounds; next, on that very fate

Whose malice hath yet spared thee one worse woe

Than even thou hast tasted. For although

Grievous is thraldom, in a world be-thronged

With the proud wrongers and the prostrate wronged,

Far deeper is the unconscious misery

Of them that shackle those who would be free!

And though the thrall'd seem hapless, theirs who thrall

Is the most dark, lost, heavenless state of all.

TO ERIN ONCE MORE

UPON that Day when thou among thy peers Shalt take the place that is by right thine own, Judge not of England with a mind too prone To harsh, hard thoughts! Though oft her palsyng fears Did freeze up noble purpose, hers were tears
For the world's heartache—hers no breast of stone.
She wronged thee much: but speak not blame alone,

When forth thou step'st into the happier years.

And when, disburdened of a cumbering weight,

Thou from the transitory and fugitive—From thy dead yesterdays—art loosed, to live

At peace with God and Man and Time and Fate,

Be thine the greatness of the more than great,

Whose glory it is, divinely to forgive.

AFTER NEWS OF AN EXECUTION

Was it all folly—vonder, hour by hour, To choose, not peace, but strife, and thereto dare

The lion couched in his unnative lair, The world-feared lion, mighty to devour?

O that some folly as splendid were a flower

Not, on all shores but those, so wondrous rare!

Common as weed in Ireland everywhere

That splendid folly blooms, and hath the power

To make a mere slight boy not only face

Death with no tremblings, with no coward alarms,

But like a lover woo it to his arms,

Clasp with a joyous and a rapt embrace

Death's beauty, Death's dear sweetness, Death's pure grace,

And count all else as nought beside Death's charms.

TILL IRELAND HAS HER OWN

To all who heed, to all the freed,
To all the unfreed, 'tis known, There'll be no rest for Ireland's breast
Till Ireland Has Her Own.
Age after age will nurse the rage
That breeds not rage alone, Bringing no rest to Ireland's breast
Till Ireland Has Her Own!

And tell me, when may Englishmen Win back the peace that's flown?
There'll be no rest for England's breast
Till Ireland Has Her Own.

Each day, each hour, unhappier Power,
On an unsurer throne!
No rest, no rest for England's breast
Till Ireland Has Her Own.

YET AGAIN

(THE RT. HON. D. LLOYD GEORGE)

LIKE your renown-clad namesake, who did slay,

Far across Time and its vast charnels drear,

If only with a legendary spear

A fabled dragon, you in your midday Did unto ravening things give battle, and they

Felt your light lance through all their scales! They fear

That lance no more, perceiving but too clear

How rusted is its chivalry away.

Plunged is that spear in no foul monster's side,

But pointed at the Captive Maiden's breast,

Who, greenly robed, sits pining to be free.

For not as her Deliverer do you ride Forth, but to bid her guards be adamant, lest

She escape i' the tempest from captivity.

THE STRANGER-MINSTREL

O FAIR with broom and woodbine,
And rowan and wild rose,
Is the Land of Hope Deferred
Where the shamrock grows;
And thither did I stray
In the long-gone day,
And I gave my heart away
To sweet Ireland.

Dead Songsters of her household Have loved her and adored,
And their love was like a flame,
And their song was like a sword;

But an alien bard to-day,
All world-worn and gray,
Has sung his heart away
To sweet Ireland.

SECRET COMMUNION

PERT Folly said to skyborn Freedom:

“Thou

Hast been so long unknown on Ireland's shore,

Art certain she doth miss thee any more?

Nay, if thou should'st return to-morrow, how

Will she remember thee, whose face is now

One of the vague, dim things of heretofore?

What if she pause, loth to unlatch her door

To such a stranger?" Then with a lit brow Did Freedom speak: "Can Erin's soul forget Mine, her companion 'mid the fields and streams Of her far youth? Ah, no! And though it seems Ages untold since she and I have met Ev'n for a day, we meet at midnight yet, For always am I with her in her dreams."

TO AN IRISH PATRIOT

YOUR cause at its centre is pure: the wise plan Is to keep its circumference pure—if you can.

TO AN OPPRESSOR

COME down from thy high seat!

If with the blood of men

Its steps be slippery, the more easy, then,

The offsliding of thy feet!

And back thou never shalt be asked to climb

While this tired World ascends the stairs of Time.

THE TWO PUISSANCES

IRELAND, two Puissances there are, that claim

Untrammelled sovereign lordship and control,

This o'er thy body, thy fair outward frame,

That o'er the innermost places of thy soul.

One, by the Thames, of perishing clay and lime

Built its chief seat, and of mere crumbling stone.

One beside Tiber, gazing beyond
Time,
Hath its unfrail, unmundane, mystic throne.

And great and mighty are both these Powers on earth, O Ireland! But all men that breathe can see—Except the sightless who are blind from birth—
Which of the twain doth verily reign in thee.

THE VISION

I LOOKED forth through the Void,
And a dark Hand did draw From the near West a curtain, and I saw Dull Tyranny, on the breath of Folly upbuoyed;
And a blind surgeon, Statecraft, there employed To keep the wounds of Ireland ever raw;
And Rapine, masked as Order, his vast maw
With vengeance still uncloyed; And round these forms, a dance of lawless Law
O'er Liberty Destroyed.

ENGLAND'S CHOICE

YONDER where shakes with antic laughter

In elfin moonlight the spoilful sea,
What shall the stars behold hereafter—
Ireland captive or Ireland free?

Tempest or calm for the Mother who bore us, Age-crowned England—which shall it be?

Reproach or acclaim in the morrow before us?
Ireland captive or Ireland free?

The quick and the dead have joined their voices,

O mighty and proud one, crying to thee—

“Choose—while as yet in thy hands the choice is:

Ireland captive or Ireland free.”
